Call for Submissions: Boundless Exposed 2021

About: Boundless Exposed is a workshop and mentoring opportunity for emerging theatre designers of color. During this seven-week program, participating designers will have the opportunity to work alongside experienced mentors in shaping an installation-style design based on a short play.

Program Overview:
- We are seeking emerging theatre designers of color interested in an intensive collaboration with peers, mid-career design mentors, and professional actors and directors.
- Boundless Exposed will foster an inclusive, creative workshop process with no conceptual boundaries. Participants must be interested in exploring a text fully through design.
- Participating designers will collaborate to create a conceptual installation to accompany a short play. This play will be written by playwright Mariana Carreño in response to the research and design interests of the participants.
- The workshop will include ten collaborative design meetings over a five-week period, as well as a final two weeks of hands-on implementation and construction.
- The program will conclude with a public presentation of participants’ original installation design, created in collaboration with a playwright, a director, and 1-2 actors. The presentation will be followed by a talkback.

Stipend: Participating designers will receive an $800 stipend upon conclusion of the program.

Mentors: An incredible team of professional theatre artists will mentor Boundless Exposed participants from start to finish, providing guidance and assistance throughout the collaborative process. Mentors will include lighting designer María-Cristina Fusté, costume designer Sarita Fellows, director Elena Araoz, and playwright Mariana Carreño. Additional resources, such as a consulting composer or video editor, may be available as needed.

Covid-19 Procedures: Participating designers will attend design meetings and technical rehearsals virtually, in accordance with Covid-19 safety recommendations. The final presentation will also take place online.
